OPINION OF THE COURT

SCIRICA, Circuit Judge.

This is an appeal from the dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) of claims brought under the Sherman Antitrust Act attacking the multi-billion dollar national tobacco settlement. Endeavoring to recoup billions of dollars in public health care costs and to reduce cigarette smoking, several states brought suit against the leading United States tobacco manufacturers. In view of the magnitude of potential liability and the prospect of multiple actions, the parties asked Congress to resolve the suits through a national legislative remedy. After congressional efforts stalled, forty-six states[1] forged a settlement with the tobacco manufacturers known as the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Plaintiffs, who are cigarette wholesalers, challenge the Multistate Settlement Agreement as a violation of § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.[2]

The District Court held that plaintiffs failed to state a claim under the Sherman Act because the tobacco companies

Four states (Florida, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Texas) entered into prior separate settlements with the tobacco companies and are thus not signatories to the Multistate Settlement Agreement. *PTI, Inc. v. A.D. Bedell, a cigarette wholesaler, brought this class action on behalf of itself and 900 similarly situated wholesalers seeking damages and a permanent injunction of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Defendants, Philip Morris, Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Inc., and Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., are cigarette manufacturers who were original signatories to the Multistate Settlement Agreement.[7]

Along with Lorillard Tobacco Co.,[8] the fourth largest cigarette producer, they are collectively known as the major tobacco companies or the Majors. The Majors are responsible for 98% of cigarette sales in the United States. Bedell, as a wholesaler, bought directly from the Majors.

In the mid 1990's, individual states commenced bringing law suits against the Majors to recoup healthcare costs and reduce smoking by minors.[9] As one state Attorney General declared, " '[The] lawsuit is premised on a simple notion: you caused the health crisis; you pay for it.' " Janofsky, Mississippi Seeks Damages from Tobacco Companies, N.Y. Times, May 24, 1994, at A12 (quoting Mississippi Attorney General Mike Moore). The States alleged a wide range of deceptive and fraudulent practices by the tobacco companies over decades of sales.[10] Faced with the prospect of defending multiple actions nationwide, the Majors sought a congressional remedy, primarily in the form of a national legislative settlement.[11] In June 1997, the National Association of Attorneys General and the Majors jointly petitioned Congress for a global resolution.

The proposed congressional remedy (1997 National Settlement Proposal) for the cigarette tobacco problem resembled the eventual Multistate Settlement Agreement, but with important differences. For example, although the congressional proposal would have earmarked 1/3 of all funds to combat teenage smoking, no such restrictions appear in the Multistate Settlement Agreement. 1997 National Settlement Proposal, Title VII, available at http://www.cnn.com/us/9705/tobacco/docs/proposal.html (last visited June 18, 2001). In addition, the congressional proposal would have mandated Food & Drug Administration harmful nature of tobacco/nicotine[,] . . . industry control and manipulation of nicotine to foster addiction and thus profits[,] . . . intentionally attracting and addicting children to tobacco products," and "targeting African Americans." (complaint in Commonwealth of Pennsylvania v. Philip Morris, Inc.). These claims encompass civil conspiracy, willful and negligent breach of a special duty, fraudulent misrepresentation, fraudulent concealment, negligent design, strict liability, unfair trade practices, public nuisance, and negligent and intentional entrustment.

11. As of October 1996, sixteen states had brought suit. See Utah Sues Tobacco Companies, The Washington Post, Oct. 1, 1996, at A9 (reporting Utah joined fifteen other states, along with many counties and cities, in filing lawsuits against major tobacco companies).

oversight and imposed federal advertising restrictions. It also would have granted immunity from state prosecutions; eliminated punitive damages in individual tort suits; and prohibited the use of class actions, or other joinder or aggregation devices without the defendant's consent, assuring that only individual actions could be brought. See id. at Title V(A), VIII(A), VIII(B). The congressional proposal called for payments to the States of $368.5 billion over twenty-five years. 1997 National Settlement Proposal, Title VI.[12] By contrast, assuming that the Majors would maintain their market share, the Multistate Settlement Agreement provides baseline payments of about $200 billion over twenty-five years.[13] See Multistate Settlement Agreement, §§ IX(a), (b), (c).

12. Because the congressional proposal also would have involved much higher payments by the Majors (by up to $170 billion), it was expected that cigarette prices would increase $.60/pack. See FTC Report on Competition and the Financial Impact of the Proposed National Tobacco Settlement 34 (September 1997).

13. This baseline payment is subject to

Appendix A

Significantly for our purposes, the congressional proposal included an explicit exemption from the federal antitrust laws. See 1997 National Settlement Proposal, App. IV(C)(2) (stating cigarette manufacturers would have been permitted to "jointly confer, coordinate or act in concert, for this limited purpose [of achieving the goals of the settlement]"). The Multistate Settlement Agreement contains no corresponding exemption from the federal antitrust laws.

Congress rejected the proposed settlement in the spring of 1998.[14] Undeterred, the State Attorneys General and the Majors continued to negotiate and on November 23, 1998, they executed the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Afterwards, twenty other tobacco manufacturers, representing 2% of the market, joined the settlement as Subsequent Participating Manufacturers (SPMs). The addition of the Subsequent Participating Manufacturers meant that nearly all of the cigarette producers in the domestic market had signed the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Their addition was significant. The Majors allegedly feared that any cigarette manufacturer left out of a settlement (Non-Participating Manufacturers or NPMs) would be free to expand market share or could enter the market with lower prices, drastically altering the Majors' future profits and their ability to increase prices to pay for the settlement.

14. An alternative settlement, proposed by Senator John McCain of Arizona, which included even higher payments from the industry ($500 billion) and would not have provided antitrust exemptions was also defeated, and along with it the prospects of a federal solution.

Appendix A

Plaintiffs brought suit challenging sections of the Multistate Settlement Agreement allegedly designed to maintain market share and restrict entry. The challenged sections of the Multistate Settlement Agreement are the so-called "Renegade Clause,"[15] the settlement's primary mechanism for allocating payment responsibilities based on production levels, and the provision calling for "Qualifying Statutes," which are state laws passed as a result of commitments made in the Multistate Settlement Agreement that require Non-Participating Manufacturers to pay into state escrow accounts for each sale made. Plaintiffs claim the Multistate Settlement Agreement and resulting state implementing statutes create an output cartel that imposes draconian monetary penalties for increasing cigarette production beyond 1998 levels and effectively bars new entry into the cigarette market.

The Renegade Clause allegedly was designed to prevent current cigarette manufacturers from decreasing prices to increase market share and to bar new entrants from the market.[16]

15. Small cigarette producers (who generally sell at a discount) are referred to as "Renegades." The "Renegade Clause" incorporates two distinct sections of the Multistate Settlement Agreement, one part deals with Non-Participating Manufacturers or NPMs, the other with Subsequent Participating Manufacturers or SPMs. See MSA §§ IX(i) (SPMs), (d) (NPMs). The Attorneys General object to the appellation "Renegade" claiming that only voluntary signatories are affected by its provisions. But there are penalties imposed on non-signatories under the Qualifying Statutes which each State must try to implement in accordance with the Multistate Settlement Agreement.

16. There were similar provisions in the congressional proposal designed to restrict Non-Participating Manufacturers (NPMs). (Cont'd)

Appendix A

One part of the Renegade Clause affects tobacco companies (SPMs) that later join the Multistate Settlement Agreement. This section creates strong disincentives for Subsequent Participating Manufacturers to increase their production and market share. If a Subsequent Participating Manufacturer exceeds its 1998 market share (or exceeds 125% of 1997 market share if that is greater), then it must pay into the settlement fund.[17] By maintaining historic market share, it would owe nothing to the settlement fund. For every carton of cigarettes sold in 1999 over its 1998 level, a SPM would have to pay $.19/pack into the settlement fund. Plaintiffs contend this equaled 75% of the wholesale price, which defendants do not contest. See Br. of Appellants at 14 (applying MSA § IX(C)); MSA Ex. E. This mechanism allegedly discourages Subsequent Participating Manufacturers from underpricing the Majors to increase market share, even if they could efficiently do so.

Another part of the Renegade Clause affects Non-Participating Manufacturers (NPMs), cigarette companies

These provisions provided for escrow payments and also subjected them to the broad regulatory authority that would have been created under the proposal. See 1997 National Settlement Proposal, Title II, Part C.

17. The Multistate Settlement Agreement provides, "A Subsequent Participating Manufacturer shall have payment obligations under this Agreement only in the event that its Market Share in any calendar year exceeds the greater of (1) its 1998 Market Share or (2) 125 percent of its 1997 Market Share." MSA § IX(i)(1). These payments "are in addition to the corresponding payments that are due from the Original Participating Manufacturers." MSA § IX(i)(1).

that never sign the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Non-Participating Manufacturers include potential new entrants into the tobacco market. See MSA § IX(d). But as noted, between the SPMs and the Majors, about 99% of the current cigarette producers signed the Multistate Settlement Agreement. The strictures of the Multistate Settlement Agreement affecting NPMs were largely responsible for such participation. Potential new entrants into the cigarette market would bear the burden of the Renegade Clause's future effects.

Under the Renegade Clause, if Non-Participating Manufacturers gain market share (thereby reducing the Majors' market share) the Majors may decrease their principal payments to the settlement fund. If the Majors lose market share to NPMs, the payments to the settlement fund are not merely reduced proportionately. See MSA § IX(d)(1)(A) & (B). For example, if a participating tobacco company lost 10% of its market share to a new entrant or other company that did not sign the Multistate Settlement Agreement, it may be able to reduce its payments by as much as 24%. See Hanoch Dagan & James J. White, Governments, Citizens, and Injurious Industries, 75 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 354, 381 (2000) (making hypothetical calculations based on the formulas in MSA § IX(d)).[18]

Manufacturers. To protect the public health gains achieved by this Agreement, certain payments made pursuant to this Agreement shall be subject to an NPM Adjustment. Payments by the Original Participating Manufacturers to which the NPM Adjustment applies shall be adjusted as provided below:

(A) Subject to the provisions of subsections (d)(1)(C), (d)(1)(D) and (d)(2) below, each Allocated Payment shall be adjusted by subtracting from such Allocated Payment the product of such Allocated Payment amount multiplied by the NPM Adjustment Percentage. The "NPM Adjustment Percentage" shall be calculated as follows;

(i) If the Market Share Loss for the year immediately preceding the year in which the payment in question is due is less than or equal to 0 (zero), then the NPM Adjustment Percentage shall equal zero.

(ii) If the Market Share Loss for the year immediately preceding the year in which the payment In question is due is greater than 0 (zero) and less than or equal to 16 2/3 percentage points, then

By enacting the Qualifying Statute set forth in the Multistate Settlement Agreement, see MSA Ex. T, a state can preclude reduced payments.[19] The model statute provides, > the NPM Adjustment Percentage shall be equal to the product of (x) such Market Share Loss and (y) 3 (three).

> (iii) If the Market Share Loss for the year immediately preceding the year in which the payment in question is due is greater than 16 2/3 percentage points, then the NPM Adjustment Percentage shall be equal to the sum of (x) 50 percentage points and (y) the product of (1) the Variable Multiplier and (2) the result of such Market Share Loss minus 16 2/3 percentage points.

The remainder of § IX(d) gives definitions for some of the terms and describes who will make this calculation and when it will be made each year, as well as how the adjusted payments will be allocated among the States and the signatories. See MSA § IX(d).

19. The Multistate Settlement Agreement provides:

> (B) A Settling State's Allocated Payment shall not be subject to an NPM Adjustment: (i) if such Settling State continuously had a Qualifying Statute (as defined in subsection (2)(E) below) in full force and effect during rising to $.36/pack by the year 2007. See MSA Ex. T. A Non-Participating Manufacturer only can recover its deposited funds: (1) if it is forced to pay a judgment or settlement in connection with a claim brought by the state, or (2) after the passage of twenty years free from any such judgments. See id. Because the Non-Participating Manufacturers are not part of the settlement, they have no immunity and would be subject to similar suits brought by the State Attorneys General against the Majors (for fraudulent concealment, misrepresentation, conspiracy, etc.). To encourage and assist the States in bringing these suits, the Multistate Settlement Agreement created a $50 million Enforcement Fund (paid for by the Majors) to investigate and sue NPMs to enforce the settlement. See MSA § VIII(c). Because of the Qualifying Statutes, a Non-Participating Manufacturer must decide either to join the Multistate Settlement Agreement and abide by the same restrictions on market share facing a SPM (which for new manufacturers would be costly because they would have a baseline production level of zero), or face litigation and pay a tax into a state-established escrow account for any potential adverse judgments.

Together, the Renegade Clause, the Qualifying Statutes and the Enforcement Fund allegedly create severe obstacles to market entry, or to increasing production and market share.[20] This is not accidental. The Multistate Settlement

20. Because this is an appeal from a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). we address only the complaint's allegations. But we note that news reports have stated that although the Multistate Settlement Agreement was designed to frustrate new cigarette market

Agreement explicitly proclaims its purpose to reduce the ability of non-signatory cigarette manufacturers to seize market share because of the competitive advantage accruing from not contributing to the settlement. It declares that the agreement "effectively and fully neutralizes the cost disadvantages that the Participating Manufacturers experience vis-à-vis Non-Participating Manufacturers with such Settling States as a result of the provisions of this Agreement." MSA § IX(d)(2)(E).

It is these barriers to entry and increased production that plaintiffs claim form an output cartel that violates the antitrust laws. Because output is restricted and because of the inelastic demand for cigarettes,[21] in part due to their addictive nature, the Multistate Settlement Agreement allegedly permitted the Majors to raise their prices to near monopoly levels — levels allegedly above those necessary to fund the settlement payments. For example, assert plaintiffs, the settlement could have been funded by only a $.19/pack increase in price, but the Majors immediately raised prices by $.45/pack, and subsequently by another entrants, it appears that some new discount cigarette manufacturers have been able to enter the market. Gordon Fairclough, Tobacco Deal Has Unintended Effect: New Discount Smokes, Wall St. J., May 1, 2001, at A1. Some new entrants apparently have failed to make required payments into escrow accounts as required by the state enacted Qualifying Statutes. Others apparently have accepted significantly lower profit margins. See id.

21. Demand for a product is inelastic if the price can rise without a corresponding drop in demand.

$.31/pack.[22] When this lawsuit was filed, the Majors had already raised the wholesale price of cigarettes $.76/pack since the adoption of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Rapid price increases of this magnitude would ordinarily permit competitors to maintain or reduce prices or prompt new competitors to enter the market. But neither occurred, assert plaintiffs, because the barriers erected by the Multistate Settlement Agreement effectively barred entry and discouraged tobacco companies from maintaining a lower price because of the penalties for increased production.

Defendants contend the Multistate Settlement Agreement did not violate the antitrust laws, but even if so, they are immune under both the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which protects petitioning activity, and the Parker doctrine, which protects sovereign acts of states from antitrust liability. We turn first to the antitrust issues.

II.

Antitrust Injury

The defendants argue the express terms of the Multistate Settlement Agreement do not constitute an agreement to limit output in violation of the antitrust laws. Plaintiffs counter that the Multistate Settlement Agreement's Renegade Clause,

22. See Vanessa O'Connell, Philip Morris, RJR Lift Wholesale Price For Cigarettes 45 Cents a Pack Today, Wall St. J., November 24, 1998, at A1; Gordon Fairclough, Major Makers of Cigarettes Raise Prices, Wall St. J., August 31, 1999, at A3 ($.18/pack increase); Gordon Fairclough, Philip Morris Boosts Prices of Cigarettes, Wall St. J., January 17, 2000, at B12 ($.13/pack increase).

Qualifying Statutes, and Enforcement Fund, have the "unequivocal purpose and effect" to "effectuate a cartel limiting the output of cigarettes, thereby allowing the Majors to maintain supracompetitive prices," which is a per se violation of the antitrust laws. Br. of Appellants at 29.

To maintain a cause of action under the Sherman Act, "[p]laintiffs must prove antitrust injury, which is to say (1) injury of the type the antitrustlaws were intended to prevent and (2) that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 489 (1997) (emphasis in original). The antitrust injury requirement "ensures that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place, and it prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs." 2 Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 362 (Rev. ed. 1997).

Here, the losses plaintiffs allege resulted from explicit provisions of the Multistate Settlement Agreement, not from competition. Plaintiffs allege the major tobacco companies formed and enforced a cartel to restrict output through the Multistate Settlement Agreement. As a result, plaintiffs claim the Majors "imposed artificially high prices on direct purchasers," without fear of competition. See Complaint ¶ 2. Although this result would affect cigarette prices for retailers and consumers, as well as for wholesalers like plaintiffs, the Supreme Court has determined that direct buyers are the only parties with standing to assert damage claims under the antitrust laws for overcharges based on an output cartel. Ill. Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 734

(1977) ("[T]he antitrust laws will be more effectively enforced by concentrating the full recovery for the overcharge in the direct purchasers rather than by allowing every plaintiff potentially affected by the overcharge to sue only for the amount it could show was absorbed by it."). Although plaintiffs, as wholesalers, have alleged an injury, they must also demonstrate that the conduct which caused the injuries violated the antitrust laws.

An agreement which has the purpose and effect of reducing output is illegal under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 777 (1999) (output restrictions are anticompetitive); Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 99 (1984) (where "the challenged practices create a limitation on output; our cases have held that such limitations are unreasonable restraints of trade") (citing United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608-09 (1972)); United States v. Sacony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223 (1940). In California Dental, the Court restated that output restrictions are anticompetitive. At the same time, it refused to apply a "quick look analysis" where a local professional association had restricted certain types of advertising, but it was not obvious that the restrictions would be anticompetitive.[23] Remanding for further analysis, the Court

23. A "quick-look" analysis under the rule of reason, may be used when "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets," yet the violation is also not one considered illegal per se. Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 770. We need not address whether the output cartel acknowledged that a reduction in output was an antitrust violation. Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 777, 781. The Court cited with approval a case from the Court of Appeals of the Seventh Circuit which held that if " 'firms restrict output directly, price will rise in order to limit demand to the reduced supply. Thus, with exceptions not relevant here, raising price, reducing output, and dividing markets have the same anticompetitive effects.' " Id. at 777 (quoting General Leaseways, Inc. v. Nat'l Truck Leasing Ass'n, 744 F.2d 588, 594-95 (7th Cir. 1984)). alleged here would be illegal per se or would be illegal under a "rule of reason" analysis. As the Supreme Court has held:

> The truth is that our categories of analysis of anticompetitive effect are less fixed than terms like 'per se,' 'quick look,' and 'rule of reason' tend to make them appear. We have recognized, for example, that 'there is often no bright line separating per se from rule of reason analysts,' since 'considerable inquiry into market conditions' may be required before the application of any so-called 'per se' condemnation is justified.

laws. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 85 (recognizing that output restrictions may be permissible if required in order to market the product at all). By limiting production, the cartel is able to raise prices above competitive levels.

Federal Trade Commission/Department of Justice Guidelines also recognize that agreements to reduce output violate the antitrust laws. See FTC/DOJ Guidelines — Antitrust Guidelines for Collaborations Among Competitors, § 3.2, reprinted in 4 Trade Reg. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 20 (2000) (citing Broadcast Music Inc. v. Columbia Broad. Sys., 441 U.S. 1, 19-20 (1979)). These regulations define output agreements as "hard core cartel agreements" and violators are prosecuted criminally without regard to "claimed business purposes, anticompetitive harms, procompetitive benefits, or overall competitive effects." Id.

Plaintiffs allege the agreement between the States and the Majors purposefully creates powerful disincentives to increase cigarette production. Although the Multistate Settlement Agreement contains no explicit agreement to raise prices or restrict market share, any signatory who increases production beyond historic levels automatically will increase its proportionate share of payments to the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Normally, a company which lowers prices would be expected to increase market share. But the penalty of higher settlement payments for increased market share would discourage reducing prices here. For this reason, signatories have an incentive to raise prices to match increases by competitors. It appears this incentive structure has proven true. The Majors' prices increased dramatically and simultaneously after signing the Multistate Settlement Agreement. As noted, this included a $.45/pack increase just days after the settlement was announced, an $.18/pack increase less than a year later, and a $.13/pack increase in January of 2000. The initial $.45 increase alone was more than double what some analysts considered necessary to fund the settlement's first two annual payments. See Stuart Taylor Jr., All for Tobacco and Tobacco for All, 23 Legal Times 40, Oct. 9, 2000.

Defendants contend an antitrust analysis is unnecessary if we find either Noerr-Pennington or Parker immunity applies. But plaintiffs argue that immunity cannot attach to per se antitrust violations. We disagree. Recently we recognized immunity attached even where the plaintiff alleged a boycott regarded as illegal per se. Armstrong Surgical Ctr. Inc. v. Armstrong County Mem'l Hosp., 185 F.3d 154, 157-58 (3d Cir. 1999) (applying Parker and Noerr-Pennington immunity where complaint alleged a threat of a boycott which would have constituted an antitrust violation in the absence of immunity), cert. denied, 530 U.S. 1261 (2000). Similarly, in Pennington, the alleged conduct granted immunity would have been a per se violation of the antitrust laws. United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 660-61 (1965).

Our review at this stage is limited to the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint. On a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the issue is whether plaintiffs have properly pleaded an antitrust violation.[25] Plaintiffs allege that

25. We exercise de novo review over dismissal of claims under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6). Wilson v. Quadramed Corp., 225 F.3d defendants formed an output cartel through the Multistate Settlement Agreement that restricts production and effectively bars entry to the cigarette tobacco market. Plaintiffs also allege the cartel injured the tobacco wholesalers by charging artificially high prices.[26]

We hold that plaintiffs have properly pleaded an antitrust violation by alleging defendants agreed to form an output cartel through the Multistate Settlement Agreement that violates § 1 and § 2[27] of the Sherman Antitrust Act. But we 350, 353 (3d Cir. 2000). In evaluating the propriety of the dismissal, we examine all factual allegations and all reasonable inferences as true and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Colburn v. Upper Darby Tp., 838 F.2d 663, 666 (3d Cir. 1988). A court may dismiss a plaintiff's complaint only if the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45 (1957).

26. Defendants do not dedicate much of their argument to contesting the antitrust injury, perhaps because the District Court did not address it. The District Court found it unnecessary to decide whether plaintiffs properly pleaded an antitrust violation if it held defendants immune. A.D. Bedell Wholesale Co., Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 104 F.Supp.2d 501, 503 (W.D. Pa. 2000).

27. Section 2 of the Sherman Act applies to, "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. will affirm if the parties to the Multistate Settlement Agreement are immune under the Noerr-Pennington or the Parker doctrines. We turn now to that question.

III.

Antitrust Immunity

Defendants contend they are immune from antitrust liability under both the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which immunizes parties involved in petitioning the government, and under the Parker doctrine, which immunizes sovereign state action. Although distinct doctrines, there is substantial overlap as both "work at the intersection of antitrust and governance."[28] The two doctrines share a fundamental similarity. The Supreme Court has stated they are "complementary expressions of the principle that the antitrust distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71 (1966); see also Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 825 (3d Cir. 1984). Here, plaintiffs properly pleaded such a violation. Plaintiffs allege that the Multistate Settlement Agreement creates a cartel controlling 99.9% of the market, giving Philip Morris "the greatest market or monopoly power — i.e. the power to raise prices or decrease output." Complaint at ¶ 98. Plaintiffs also allege Philip Morris had the specific intent to monopolize the cigarette market and has done so. Complaint at ¶ 99. Immunity, if found, will apply to violations of both § 1 and § 2.

laws regulate business, not politics; Parker protects the States' acts of governing, and Noerr the citizens' participation in government." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver. Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 383 (1991). The District Court found defendants immune under both. We must affirm if defendants are immune under either doctrine.

A. Noerr-Pennington Immunity

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, "[a] party who petitions the government for redress generally is immune from antitrust liability." Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119, 122 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 871 (1999). Petitioning is immune from liability even if there is an improper purpose or motive.[29] See E. R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 138 (1961) (holding that even if the petitioner's sole purpose was to destroy its competition through passage of legislation, petitioner would be immune); Prof'l Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56 (1993) (same). Rooted in the First Amendment and fears about the threat of liability chilling political speech, the doctrine was first recognized in two Supreme Court cases holding federal antitrust laws inapplicable to private parties who attempted to influence government action — even where the petitioning had anticompetitive effects. See Noerr, 365 U.S. 127 ; United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657 (1965). Under

29. There is a "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine which holds that using the petitioning process simply as an anticompetitive tool without legitimately seeking a positive outcome to the petitioning destroys immunity. See Omni, 499 U.S. 365. There is no suggestion that the sham exception applies here.

the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, "mere attempts to influence the Legislative Branch for the passage of laws or the Executive Branch for their enforcement" are given immunity from the Sherman Act and other antitrust laws. Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510 (1972). The immunity reaches not only to petitioning the legislative and executive branches of government, but "the right to petition extends to all departments of the Government," including the judiciary. Id.

Noerr-Pennington immunity applies to actions which might otherwise violate the Sherman Act because "[t]he federal antitrust laws do not regulate the conduct of private individuals in seeking anticompetitive action from the government." Omni, 499 U.S. at 379-80. The antitrust laws are designed for the business world and "are not at all appropriate for application in the political arena." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 141. This was evident in Noerr, where defendant railroads campaigned for legislation intended to ruin the trucking industry. Even though defendants employed deceptive and unethical means, the Supreme Court held that they were still immune. This is because the Sherman Act is designed to control "business activity" and not "political activity." Id. at 129. With this underpinning, the Court stated, "[Because] [t]he right of petition is one of the freedoms protected by the Bill of Rights, . . . we cannot, of course, lightly impute to Congress an intent to invade these freedoms." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136. The antitrust laws were enacted to regulate private business and do not abrogate the right to petition.

The scope of Noerr-Pennington immunity, however, depends on the "source, context, and nature of the competitive restraint at issue." Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499 (1988). If the restraint directly results from private action there is no immunity. See id. at 500 (where the "restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action," there is immunity). Passive government approval is insufficient. Private parties cannot immunize an anticompetitive agreement merely by subsequently requesting legislative approval.

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, private parties may be immunized against liability stemming from antitrust injuries flowing from valid petitioning. This includes two distinct types of actions. A petitioner may be immune from the antitrust injuries which result from the petitioning itself. See Noerr, 365 U.S. at 143 (finding trucking industry plaintiffs' relationships with their customers and the public were hurt by the railroads' petitioning activities, yet the railroads were immune from liability). Also, and particularly relevant here, parties are immune from liability arising from the antitrust injuries caused by government action which results from the petitioning. See Pennington, 381 U.S. at 671 (holding plaintiffs could not recover damages resulting from the state's actions); Mass. Sch. of Law at Andover, Inc. v. Am. Bar Assoc., 107 F.3d 1026, 1037 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding Noerr gave immunity for any damages stemming from state adoption of requirements for bar admission to petitioners who lobbied for their adoption); 1 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 202c. Therefore, if its conduct constitutes valid petitioning, the petitioner is immune from antitrust liability whether or not the injuries are caused by the act of petitioning or are caused by government action which results from the petitioning. Here, we must determine whether a settlement agreement between private parties and sovereign states fits within the context of protected petitioning envisioned by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.[30]

Finding that negotiating the settlement was akin to petitioning the government, the District Court held defendants immune under Noerr-Pennington. Specifically, it held that the "concerted effort by defendants to influence public officials, i.e., the states' Attorneys General, to accept a settlement in exchange for dismissing the numerous lawsuits pending against defendants is among the activities protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine." A.D. Bedell, 104 F.Supp.2d at 506. We agree that defendants engaged in petitioning activity with sovereign states and are immune under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.[31]

30. Despite plaintiffs' assertions, the Supreme Court has also made it clear that there is no "conspiracy" exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. See Omni, 499 U.S. at 382 ("[W]e conclude that a 'conspiracy' exception to Noerr must be rejected."). Simply because the state officials might conspire with a private party to stifle competition does not mean that the action loses immunity. See id. 317 U.S. at 350-51 ("We find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature.").

31. In doing so, we join other federal courts which have held the Multistate Settlement Agreement is entitled to Noerr-Pennington Immunity, though we recognize these cases did not involve identical facts. See, e.g., Hise v. Philip Morris, Inc., 46 F.Supp.2d 1201, 1206 (N.D. Okla. 1999) (finding Noerr-Pennington immunity and not (Cont'd)

The importance of the right to petition has been long recognized. As early as 1215, the Magna Carta granted barons the right to petition the King of England for redress. See Julie M. Spanbauer, The First Amendment Right to Petition Government for a Redress of Grievances: Cut From a Different Cloth, 21 Hastings Const. L.Q. 15, 17 (1993) (detailing history of the right to petition from 1215 through colonial times, the constitutional convention, and today). During our colonial period, the right to petition was widely used. The importance of this right was fundamental — it guaranteed not merely expression but the preservation of democracy.[32] "The very idea of government, republican in form, implies a right on the part of its citizens to meet peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs and to petition for a redress of grievances." United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542, 552 (1875).

addressing Parker immunity), aff'd mem., 208 F.3d 226 (10th Cir. 2000); Forces Action Project LLC v. California, No. C 99-0607 MJJ, 2000 WL 20977, at *8 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 5, 2000) (same); PTI, Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 100 F.Supp.2d 1179, 1193 (C.D. Cal. 2000) (finding Noerr-Pennington immunity and finding Parker immunity due to direct state action because "[t]he M.S.A. was negotiated by the states' attorneys general and approved by the state courts, and thus cannot be violative of the antitrust laws").

32. See Aaron R. Gary, First Amendment Petition Clause Immunity From Tort Suits: In Search of A Consistent Doctrinal Framework, 33 Idaho L. Rev. 67, 113-17 (1996) (discussing the importance of the freedom to petition beyond that of expression, in part because the Petitioning Clause guarantees access to elected representatives and directly promotes republican government).

Because of the importance of the right to petition the government freely, and because "[a]ntitrust law was . . . not intended to impose a barrier between the people and their government," Noerr-Pennington immunity extends beyond filing formal grievances directly with the government. Balt. Scrap Corp. v. David J. Joseph Co., 237 F.3d 394, 398 (4th Cir. 2001) (holding secret funding of a lawsuit brought against a potential competitor to maintain a monopoly was protected under Noerr-Pennington, even though the funding party was not a litigant).

In a recent survey of the application of Noerr-Pennington immunity to non-traditional petitioning, Primetime 24-Joint Venture v. Nat'l Broad. Co., Inc., 219 F.3d 92, 99-100 (2d Cir. 2000), the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit noted the Supreme Court has extended Noerr immunity to actions before administrative agencies and the courts, Cal. Motor Transp., 404 U.S. at 508, 510-11, and that other courts have extended Noerr-Pennington immunity to include efforts to influence governmental action incidental to litigation such as prelitigation threat letters. McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco., Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1560 (11th Cir. 1992); Coastal States Mktg., Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1367-68 (5th Cir. 1983). There would seem to be no reason to differentiate settlement from other acts associated with litigation. See Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc. v. Prof'l Real Estates Investors, Inc., 944 F.2d 1525, 1528-29 (9th Cir. 1991), aff'd, 508 U.S. 49 (1993) (affirming, but not addressing whether settlement creates immunity because sham exception defeated immunity). The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has recognized the application of Noerr-Pennington immunity to settlements between private parties and state government. In Campbell v. City of Chicago, 823 F.2d 1182, 1186 (7th Cir. 1987), two cab companies were found immune from antitrust liability for their agreement to settle their lawsuits against the city in exchange for the passage of a favorable and arguably anticompetitive ordinance. The settlement in Campbell resonates favorably with the Multistate Settlement Agreement here.

The Supreme Court has yet to speak definitively on extending petitioning immunity to settlement agreements with sovereign states. Relying on a statement in Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., plaintiffs claim the Supreme Court refused to extend immunity to settlement agreements when it stated that a "consent judgment, even one entered at the behest of the Antitrust Division, does not immunize the defendant from liability for actions, including those contemplated by the decree, that violates the rights of nonparties." 441 U.S. 1, 13 (1979). "But in any event, [we are] bound by holdings, not language." Alexander v. Sandoval, 531 U.S. 1049 (2001). We believe this case is easily distinguished. There was no settlement agreement in Broadcast Music. Rather, Broadcast Music involved actions taken years after the resolution of a claim by private actors who claimed they were acting under the protection of a consent decree. The Supreme Court ruled that the consent decree did not immunize the anticompetitive actions taken by private parties. For the above quoted language, Broadcast Music relied upon Sam Fox Publishing Co. v. United States, 366 U.S. 683, 689 (1961), which did not involve Noerr-Pennington immunity. Sam Fox addressed whether a non-participant is bound by the outcome of government antitrust litigation. Id. Neither Broadcast Music nor Sam Fox mentioned Noerr-Pennington immunity, and neither is applicable to the facts here.

Plaintiffs claim a motivating purpose behind the Multistate Settlement Agreement was to create a cartel guaranteeing tobacco companies supracompetitive profits. Br. of Appellants at 49. Similarly, plaintiffs claim the States were motivated by a desire to share in these revenues. But the parties' motives are generally irrelevant and carry no legal significance.[33] See Noerr, 365 U.S. at 138. At the same time, it bears noting that the petitioning here invoked the States' traditional powers to regulate the health and welfare of its citizens. See, e.g., Great Atlantic and Pac. Tea Co., Inc. v. Hugh B. Cottrell, 424 U.S. 366, 370 (1976) ("[U]nder our constitutional scheme the States retain 'broad power' to legislate protection for their citizens in matters of local concern such as public health.").

In sum, we see no reason to distinguish between settlement agreements and other aspects of litigation between private actors and the government which give rise to antitrust immunity. The rationale is identical. Freedom from the threat

33. Motive may be relevant if it demonstrates the party acted without a legitimate desire for government action, and desired to inflict harm only through petitioning, thus falling within the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. See Noerr, 365 U.S. at 138 (1961) (a party will not have immunity when petitioning activity "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is a mere sham to cover . . . an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor"). See supra note 29. Plaintiffs do not claim the defendants' conduct places them within the sham exception.

of antitrust liability should apply to settlement agreements as it does to other more traditional petitioning activities. We hold the defendants are immune under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

B. Parker Immunity

Having found the defendants immune under Noerr-Pennington, our analysis could end here. But the District Court found Parker immunity, so we will address it as well.

Antitrust laws do not bar anticompetitive restraints that sovereign states impose "as an act of government." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 352 (1943); see also Mass. Sch. of Law at Andover, Inc. v. Am. Bar Assoc., 107 F.3d 1026, 1035 (3d Cir. 1997). The Parker doctrine relies heavily on the clarity of the State's goals and actions. "[S]tates must accept political responsibility for the actions they intend to undertake." FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636 (1992). The key question is whether the allegedly anticompetitive restraint may be considered the product of sovereign state action. If it is not, then even if sectors of state government are involved, the activity will not constitute "state action" under the Parker doctrine and will not receive immunity.

"State action," as defined in cases granting Parker immunity, is qualitatively different from "state action" in other contexts such as the Fourteenth Amendment. See 1 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 221. While the Fourteenth Amendment can cover > inadvertent or unilateral acts of state officials not acting pursuant to state policy . . . the term "state action" in antitrust adjudication refers only to government policies that are articulated with sufficient clarity that it can be said that these are in fact the state's policies, and not simply happenstance, mistakes, or acts reflecting the discretion of individual officials.[34]

Id. Because it is grounded in federalism and respect for state sovereignty, this interest in protecting the acts of the 34. "State action" as defined by the Parker doctrine also differs from the government "actions" which results from petitioning discussed previously. See supra, Section III.A. The two are not coterminous. A finding of Noerr-Pennington immunity from injury caused by government action does not require a finding of Parker state action. See 1 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 206 (interpreting our dicta in Massachusetts School of Law, 107 F.3d 1026 (3d Cir. 1997) as noting this distinction). If the government "action" taken is the result of petitioning, Noerr-Pennington immunity attaches to a broader range of government action than does Parker immunity. Noerr-Pennington immunity protects petitioning, so long as it is not a sham. See Subscription Television v. S. Cal. Theatre Owners Ass'n, 576 F.2d 230, 233-34 (9th Cir. 1978) (holding defendants immune from antitrust liability under Noerr-Pennington even though their petitioning led to the passage of an unconstitutional initiative). Under Noerr-Pennington immunity, the government actions which flow from valid petitioning need not qualify as Parker "state action." Petitioning "would be considerably chilled by a rule which would require an advocate to predict whether the desired legislation would withstand a constitutional challenge in the courts and to expose itself to a potential treble antitrust action based on that prediction." Subscription Television, 576 F.2d at 233.

sovereign state, even if anticompetitive, outweighs the importance of a freely competitive marketplace, especially in the absence of contrary congressional intent.

Without clear congressional intent to preempt, federal laws should not invalidate state programs. "In a dual system of government in which, under the Constitution, the states are sovereign, save only as Congress may constitutionally subtract from their authority, an unexpressed purpose to nullify a state's control over its officers and agents is not lightly to be attributed to Congress." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351 (1943). While individual anticompetitive acts of state governments may be considered unwise or counterproductive, the decision to make such choices lies within the sovereign power of the states. Congress did not intend to override important state interests in passing the Sherman Act. "The general language of the Sherman Act should not be interpreted to prohibit anticompetitive actions by the States in their governmental capacities as sovereign regulators." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., 499 U.S. 365, 374 (1991).

The Sherman Act was enacted to address the unlawful combination of private businesses. See Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 493 n.15 (1940) ("The history of the Sherman Act as contained in the legislative proceedings is emphatic in its support for the conclusion that 'business competition' was the problem considered and that the act was designed to prevent restraints of trade which had a significant effect on such competition."). "There is no suggestion of a purpose to restrain state action in the Act's legislative history." Parker, 317 U.S. at 343. The Sherman Act was passed "in the era of 'trusts' and of 'combinations' of businesses and of capital organized and directed to control of the market by suppression of competition in the marketing of goods and services, the monopolistic tendency of which had become a matter of public concern." Apex, 310 U.S. at 493. Given its focus on the problems of private monopolies and combinations, it is not surprising that the Sherman Act does not set out to curb clearly defined anticompetitive state actions. See Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Assoc. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 104 (1980).

When a state clearly acts in its sovereign capacity it avoids the constraints of the Sherman Act and may act anticompetitively to further other policy goals. See S. Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 54 (1985). For example, state governments frequently sanction monopolies to ensure consistent provision of essential services like electric power, gas, cable television, or local telephone service. But "a state does not give immunity to those who violate the Sherman Act by authorizing them to violate it, or by declaring that their action is lawful." Parker, 317 U.S. at 351 (states cannot authorize private parties to set a price and then enforce those prices without any evaluation of their reasonableness). Only an affirmative decision by the state itself, acting in its sovereign capacity, and with active supervision, can immunize otherwise anticompetitive activity.

When it is uncertain whether an act should be treated as state action for the purposes of Parker immunity, we apply the test set forth in California Retail Liquor Dealers Association v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 104

(1980), to "determine whether anticompetitive conduct engaged in by private parties should be deemed state action and thus shielded from the antitrust laws." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100 (1988). Applying Midcal is unnecessary if the alleged antitrust injury was the direct result of a clear sovereign state act. Mass. Sch. of Law at Andover v. Am. Bar Assoc., 107 F.3d 1026, 1036 (3d Cir. 1997); Sessions Tank Liners, Inc. v. Joor Mfg., Inc., 17 F.3d 295, 299 (9th Cir. 1994) (finding immunity from antitrust liability where "injuries for which [the plaintiff] seeks recovery flowed directly from government action"). In Massachusetts School of Law, we held that where "the states are sovereign in imposing the bar admission requirements [the alleged anticompetitive restraints], the clear articulation and active supervision requirements . . . are inapplicable." 107 F.3d at 1036. There is less need for scrutiny "[w]hen the conduct is that of the sovereign itself . . . [because] the danger of unauthorized restraint of trade does not arise." PTI, Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 100 F.Supp.2d 1179, 1196 (C.D. Ca. 2000). Similarly, concerns about the legitimacy of the action are reduced. Thus we must first decide if Midcal applies to the States' actions in negotiating and implementing the Multistate Settlement Agreement.

The Supreme Court has recognized state legislative and judicial action as sovereign under Parker. But "[c]loser analysis is required" when the action is less directly that of the legislature or judiciary. Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 568 (1984) (relying in part on Midcal). One Court of Appeals has decided that executive officers and agencies "are entitled to Parker immunity for actions taken pursuant to their constitutional or statutory authority, regardless whether these particular actions or their anticompetitive effects were contemplated by the legislature," without the need for Midcal analysis. Charley's Taxi Radio Dispatch Corp. v. SIDA of Haw., Inc., 810 F.2d 869, 876 (9th Cir. 1987). We have yet to address whether the acts of executive officials constitute state action that avoids Midcal analysis. Furthermore, in this case, we must determine whether the antitrust injuries were more attributable to private parties than to government action, as was the case in Midcal.[35]

1. Direct Application of Parker

An argument can be made that the Multistate Settlement Agreement, and any of its anticompetitive effects, were the 35. Parker, by its own terms, immunizes only states. But in order to give effect to Parker immunity, private parties to state action must also be immune. Armstrong Surgical Ctr, Inc. v. Armstrong County Mem'l Hosp., 185 F.3d 154, 159 (3d Cir. 1999) ("[I]f relief is sought solely for injury as to which the state would enjoy immunity under Parker, the private petitioner also enjoys immunity."). Otherwise, plaintiffs could sue only the private parties and by winning antitrust judgments against them, could thwart state policies as if there were no state immunity. No state could enter into an agreement with private groups, even to further clear state policies, because the potential liability of the private groups would prevent them from joining. Artful pleading should not frustrate state policy. S. Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc., v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 56-57 (1985) (absent immunity for private parties, a "plaintiff could frustrate any State program merely by filing suit against the regulated private parties"). If Parker immunity attaches, it would also reach the private participants of the Multistate Settlement Agreement.

direct result of state government action.[36] For each signatory state, there was active involvement by high ranking executive officials and the agreement was subject to state court approval. The Multistate Settlement Agreement was negotiated by Attorneys General from each state to settle existing and contemplated lawsuits. The Multistate Settlement Agreement required that, > each Settling State that is a party to a lawsuit . . . and each Participating Manufacturer will:

> > (A) tender this agreement to the Court in such Settling State for its approval; and

36. The District Court found direct state action and thus did not apply Midcal. A.D. Bedell, 104 F.Supp.2d at 507 ("After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties and the amici curiae, I conclude that because the conduct of entering into, executing and implementing the M.S.A. was undertaken by the settling states functioning in their sovereign capacities, to the extent Plaintiff's injuries are premised upon said conduct, liability for said conduct by the states would be subject to Parker state action immunity. Obviously in so holding, I opine, contrary to the argument presented by Plaintiff, that in this case, application of the Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97 (1980), test is inappropriate."). Similarly, one other court which has addressed the Multistate Settlement Agreement has found the presence of direct state action and did not undertake a Midcal analysis. See PTI, Inc. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 100 F.Supp.2d 1179, 1196 (C.D. Cal. 2000) (finding that because of the direct actions by the State Attorneys General, approval by state courts, and implementation of Qualifying Statutes by state legislatures, the Multistate Settlement Agreement was the result of direct state action, rendering Midcal inapplicable).

> (B) tender to the Court in such Settling state for entry of a consent decree conforming to the model consent decree attached hereto as Exhibit L.

MSA § XIII(b)(1); see also PTI, 100 F.Supp.2d at 1196.

In most cases, the state legislatures were involved as well. Although they lacked a direct role in forming or approving the Multistate Settlement Agreement, the legislatures were charged with, and responsible for, the enactment of the Qualifying Statutes which, although technically voluntary, enforce important components of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. See MSA § IX(d)(2)(E), (F) and (G). It is apparent that legislative enactment of the Qualifying Statutes signified state approval of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. See Cal. Aviation Inc. v. City of Santa Monica, 806 F.2d 905, 909 n.5 (9th Cir. 1986) (noting statutes passed afterwards can be evidence of pre-existing state policy to allow anticompetitive behavior). In a few states, the legislatures played an even greater role by applying pressure on the Attorney General or Governor to bring suit or by passing legislation authorizing the Attorney General to bring suit against the tobacco companies.[37] Additionally,

37. See Kris Mayes, Legislators Say States Should Sue Tobacco Firms, The Arizona Republic, March 23, 1996, at B1 (reporting state lawmakers in Arizona urged the State Attorney General to join other states and file suit); Ron Scherer, More States Plan to Sue for Costs of Smoking, The Christian Science Monitor, July 12, 1994, at 6 (stating the Florida and Massachusetts legislatures passed bills that permitted the states to sue the tobacco companies for reimbursement of medical expenses).

each branch of state government had a role in the execution or operation of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. Under this analysis, one could find direct state action foreclosing the application of Midcal.

Under a different view, we focus not on the negotiation and consummation of the Multistate Settlement Agreement, but on its actual operation and resulting effects, since that is the true cause of the anticompetitive effects. This is how the Supreme Court analyzed the behavior in Midcal.

In Midcal, the price setting structure that resulted in antitrust injury would not have existed but for the state regulation. Only because of state legislative enactments did California wine producers hold power over the wholesalers to engage in resale price maintenance. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105. Because the actual parties involved in the anticompetitive behavior were private parties, the Supreme Court determined the alleged violation of the antitrust laws was not obvious state action and devised what has come to be known as the Midcal test.

We have found direct state action, without Midcal analysis, only when the allegedly anticompetitive behavior was the direct result of acts within the traditional sovereign powers of the state. See Mass. Sch. of Law, 107 F.3d at 1036; see also Zimomra v. Alamo Rent-A-Car, Inc., 111 F.3d 1495, 1500 (10th Cir. 1997). In Massachusetts School of Law, we held Midcal inapplicable because the state acted as sovereign in imposing bar admission requirements. 107 F.3d at 1036 (Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc., an unaccredited law school, had challenged the state requirement that a student graduate from an ABA accredited law school as an anticompetitive restraint). We distinguished Midcal and its progeny as "inapplicable because they dealt with situations where private parties were engaging in conduct . . . which led directly to the alleged antitrust injury." Id. Similarly, in Zimomra, the Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit held Midcal inapplicable in a challenge to rental car price fixing because the city and county, and not a private actor, had the ultimate responsibility for setting rental car daily use fees and the private parties "had no such discretionary authority." 111 F.3d at 1500. In neither case was a private party responsible for the resulting anticompetitive act; and thus there was no need to apply the Midcal analysis.

Although the Multistate Settlement Agreement was a negotiated settlement by State Attorneys General, and the state legislatures were responsible for passing the Qualifying Statutes to enforce important components of the agreement, these acts by the governmental parties were not the direct source of the anticompetitive injuries.[38] Therefore, it would appear that, just as the injury in Midcal was caused by private parties taking advantage of the state imposed market structure, the anticompetitive injury here resulted from the tobacco companies' conduct after implementation of the Multistate Settlement Agreement, and not from any further positive action by the States. Even though, as defendants argue, the Multistate Settlement Agreement created the cartel, this fact makes the case analogous to Midcal, not different.

38. The defendants claim any injury here occurs because of the these acts and not because of private action. Br. of Appellees at 31.

The signing of the Multistate Settlement Agreement and the establishment of the output cartel are not purely private actions, nor are they entirely attributable to the state in the manner of a legislative act. As such, this case resembles a "hybrid restraint" as discussed by Justice Stevens in his concurrence in Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 666-67 (1982) (Stevens, J., concurring).[39] Hybrid restraints are not the type of sovereign state action found in Massachusetts School of Law or Zimomra, that avoid Midcal treatment. Instead, hybrid restraints involve a degree of private action which calls for Midcal analysis. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 666 ("Hybrid restraints of this character require analysis that is different from a public regulatory scheme on the one hand, and a purely private restraint on the other.") (citations omitted) (Stevens, J., concurring). Therefore, to determine if the allegedly anticompetitive sections of the Multistate Settlement Agreement were "state action" under the Parker doctrine, we will apply the Midcal analysis.

For the reasons expressed, namely that the antitrust injuries here were not caused by the solitary acts of the state acting in its traditional capacity, but were instead caused by hybrid acts involving private parties in the unique setting of a joint settlement, we believe this form of alleged anticompetitive restraint requires the Midcal analysis.

39. The Supreme Court has "twice held that hybrid price-fixing restraints are prohibited by the Sherman Act." Id. "In both cases the private decision to fix prices was unsupervised by the State but made effective by state law." Rice, 458 U.S. at 666 (Stevens, J., concurring) (citing Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384 (1951); Midcal, 445 U.S. 97).

2. Midcal

To qualify as state action under the Midcal test, "the challenged restraint must be one 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy.' " 445 U.S. at 104 (quoting City of Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 410 (1978) (opinion of Brennan, J.)). A government entity need not "be able to point to a specific, detailed, legislative authorization" to assert a successful Parker defense. Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 415. But it must be evident that under the "clear articulation" standard the challenged restraint is part of state policy. As the Supreme Court has stated, "Midcal confirms that while a State may not confer antitrust immunity on private persons by fiat, it may displace competition with active state supervision if the displacement is both intended by the State and implemented in its specific details." FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 633 (1992).

Here, the States' reasons for bringing suits against the Majors — to reduce teenage smoking, address public health concerns, and recoup state health care expenditures — were evident and clearly articulated. State Attorneys General and Governors made public pronouncements which received national coverage.[40] Other suing states made similar Settlement Agreement by issuing consent judgments and dismissing the lawsuits. This was required by the Multistate Settlement Agreement which provided that each signatory state would "tender to the Court in such Settling State for entry of a consent decree conforming to the model consent decree" included in the agreement. See MSA § XIII(b)(1). The lawsuits were dismissed under the consent agreements. The state legislatures also demonstrated their approval in most of the States by passing implementing legislation. See Cal. Aviation Inc., 806 F.2d at 909 n.5 (noting that statutes passed afterwards are evidence of pre-existing state policy to allow anticompetitive behavior). Even before the settlement, legislatures of some states targeted the tobacco industry by putting pressure on the Attorney General or Governor to bring suit.[42] In view of public pronouncements of the States' intentions and goals, along with active involvement from each branch of state government, it is evident the Multistate Settlement Agreement was backed by clearly articulated state policy.[43]

The second prong of the Midcal test is whether the resulting antitrust violation was "actively supervised" by the state. This standard is more problematic. The essential inquiry of the "actively supervised" prong is to determine if the "anticompetitive scheme is the State's own." FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 635 (1992). The active supervision prong "requires that state officials have and exercise power to review particular anticompetitive acts of private parties and disapprove those that fail to accord with state policy." Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 101 (1988). "Absent such a program of supervision, there is no realistic assurance that a private party's anticompetitive conduct promotes state policy, rather than merely the party's individual interests." Id. at 100-01. "Such active state review is clearly necessary where private defendants are empowered with some type of discretionary authority in connection with the anticompetitive acts (e.g. to determine price or rate structures)." Zimomra, 111 F.3d at 1500. Rubber stamp approval of private action does not constitute state action. A state must independently review and approve the anticompetitive behavior to satisfy this prong of the Parker doctrine. Patrick, 486 U.S. at 101 ("The active supervision requirement mandates that the State exercise ultimate control over the challenged anticompetitive conduct."); Ticor, 998 F.2d at 1139.

Here, plaintiffs allege the Multistate Settlement Agreement primarily furthers the private tobacco companies' interests and not those of the States. While we do not agree with this characterization, it is clear the Multistate Settlement Agreement empowers the tobacco companies to make anticompetitive decisions with no regulatory oversight by the States. Specifically, the defendants are free to fix and raise prices, allegedly without fear of competition. The question then is whether the Multistate Settlement Agreement, with all its duties and responsibilities, creates sufficient state supervision even though the pricing decisions are unregulated.

The States actively and continually monitor the implementation of portions of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. See MSA §§ VII-VIII. After requiring a state court consent decree, the Multistate Settlement Agreement also mandates state courts to maintain continuing jurisdiction over enforcement of disputes between the States and the tobacco companies. See MSA § VII(a). Under the Multistate Settlement Agreement, the state courts may order compliance in the form of an Enforcement Order. See MSA § VII(c)(3). If a State Attorney General believes a manufacturer has failed to comply with an Enforcement Order, it may seek an order for civil contempt or monetary sanction to force compliance. See MSA § VII(c)(4). Furthermore, for a period of seven years after settlement, the Attorney General of a Settling State may inspect all non-privileged records of the tobacco companies, and will have access to interview directors, officers and employees upon reasonable belief of a violation of the Multistate Settlement Agreement. See MSA § VII(g).

The Multistate Settlement Agreement also establishes a $50 million fund to assist the States in enforcing the Multistate Settlement Agreement. See MSA § VIII(c). This fund is to be used restrictions placed on the tobacco manufacturers. They are prohibited from taking "any action, directly or indirectly, to target Youth within any Settling State in the advertising, promotion, or marketing of Tobacco Products," MSA § III(a); they also agreed to refrain from using "any cartoon in the advertising, promoting, packaging or labeling of Tobacco products." MSA § III(b).

Despite these factors, we are not convinced that the States satisfy Midcal's "active supervision" prong. This is because the States' supervision does not reach the parts of the Multistate Settlement Agreement that are the source of the antitrust injury. It is the conduct that violates the antitrust laws that states must "actively supervise" in order for Parker immunity to attach.

As we recognized in Norman's on the Waterfront, Inc. v. Wheatley, "an arrangement sponsored by the state is not necessarily state action for the purposes of the antitrust laws." 444 F.2d 1011, 1017 (3d Cir. 1971) (citing Woods Exploration & Producing Co., Inc. v. Aluminum Co. of Am., 438 F.2d 1286, 1294 (5th Cir. 1971) for the proposition that "it is not every governmental act that points a path to an antitrust shelter"). In Wheatley, we analyzed a series of Parker cases demonstrating the state must be actively involved in establishing the rules of the market as well as in the anticompetitive activity. Because " 'states can neither authorize individuals to perform acts which violate the antitrust laws nor declare that such action is lawful,' " many of these cases of hybrid restraints turn on whether the state remains involved in the actual pricing by the regulated parties. Wheatley, 444 F.2d at 1017 (quoting Asheville Tobacco Bd. of Trade, Inc. v. Fed. Trade Comm'n, 263 F.2d 502, 509 (4th Cir. 1959)).

MSA § XVIII(b)(2).

Significantly, in Midcal, the State of California enacted a pricing system for the wine industry. Because the State did not exercise direct control over the resulting prices set by the private actors, and did not review the reasonableness of the prices, the Supreme Court found insufficient "active supervision" to qualify as state action. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105-06. Therefore, there was no immunity for setting anticompetitive prices under this system. Id.

In Midcal, the challenged "restraints" were state statutes on pricing and resale price maintenance. But there were several other ways in which the State of California regulated the wine industry. See, e.g., Cal. Bus & Prof. Stat. Ann. §§ 25600-67 (West 1964).[47] California actively supervised 47. Although some of these statutory provisions have been amended since Midcal, the bulk were enacted before Midcal (in 1953). Here we cite the statutes as they existed when Midcal was decided.

when, where, and to whom wine or other alcoholic beverages could be sold,[48] the markings and signs on labels,[49] penalties for underage use,[50] and advertisements, including prohibiting advertising to minors.[51] This "supervision" was not cited in Midcal because it did not constitute part of the anticompetitive restraint at issue. Under Parker, a comprehensive regulatory scheme would be immune from antitrust liability because the "State would 'displace unfettered business freedom' with its own power," Midcal, 445 U.S. at 106. But the Supreme Court in Midcal was silent about the impact of other regulatory provisions in the California Code denoting, we believe, the absence of a comprehensive regulatory scheme in this sense.

Appendix A

Since Midcal, other courts have found that if a state creates or sanctions a monopoly or cartel through its sovereign powers, but does not regulate the resulting prices, the resulting anticompetitive behavior should not be granted immunity. In Wheatley, we held that because the Virgin Islands Alcoholic Beverages Fair Trade Law did not grant the power to "approve, disapprove, or modify the prices fixed by private persons," the program could not meet the active supervision prong of Midcal and was not immune under Parker. In Asheville Tobacco, the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit held that where a state statute authorized the creation of local tobacco boards to regulate tobacco sales at auctions, and where the states did not continue to supervise the decisions of these boards, the board's actions were not protected by Parker immunity. This principle has also been applied in state granted monopoly cases. In Gas Light Co. of Columbus v. Georgia Power Co., 440 F.2d 1135 (5th Cir. 1971), the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit found a utility which had been given a monopoly by the state was entitled to Parker immunity only because its prices were regulated extensively by the state through a process of full adversarial hearings.

In each of these cases, the decision by the state to allow, or even to create, an anticompetitive scheme did not establish immunity. As a leading antitrust treatise has recognized, "A state may be free to determine for itself how much competition is desirable, provided that it substitutes adequate control wherever it has substantially weakened competition." Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 221 (citing Wheatley, Asheville Tobacco, and Georgia Power). Under this jurisprudence, only when the state approves and actively supervises the results of the anticompetitive scheme does Parker immunity attach.

As noted, some provisions of the Multistate Settlement Agreement actively regulate the tobacco companies, like those imposing advertising restrictions.[52] But these provisions have no effect on pricing or production and thus do not regulate the challenged anticompetitive conduct. Patrick, 486 U.S. at 101. In contrast, the anticompetitive restraints in the Multistate Settlement Agreement that permit the tobacco companies to maintain an output cartel are the Renegade Clause and, arguably, the resulting Qualifying Statutes.

The States here are actively involved in the maintenance of the scheme, but they lack oversight or authority over the tobacco manufacturers' prices and production levels. These decisions are left entirely to the private actors. Nothing in the Multistate Settlement Agreement or its Qualifying Statutes gives the States authority to object if the tobacco companies raise their prices. In fact, it appears these increases have already happened. As noted, the Majors have raised their prices sharply and uniformly since the implementation of the Multistate Settlement Agreement — according to plaintiffs, by 50% since 1997. See Complaint at ¶ 36. These price increases have not been monitored or regulated by the States. The Multistate Settlement Agreement imposes no restrictions on pricing or provisions to temper the effects of 52. See MSA § III (restricting the targeting of youth, the use of cartoons, and imposing other wide reaching regulations on advertising).

the output cartel.[53] Under this set of facts, there is insufficient evidence of active supervision of the allegedly anticompetitive restraints to satisfy this prong of Midcal.[54]

Although the Multistate Settlement Agreement is the product of a "clearly articulated" state policy, because the States do not "actively supervise" the anticompetitive restraints, the participants are not entitled to Parker immunity.[55]

53. We could speculate that this prong might be met if there were provisions in the Multistate Settlement Agreement which granted the state oversight authority on the reasonableness of price increases. It is also the case that under certain circumstances, immunity may attach even in the absence of supervision where the state action creates a scheme where anticompetitive behavior is certain to occur and where further supervision would serve no purpose. See 1 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, at ¶ 221e4, ¶ 226e (citing examples). However, in this case, the Multistate Settlement Agreement left significant decisions to private decision makers. The actual pricing decisions are exclusively under the control of the tobacco companies. Only their effects are governed by the structure of the Multistate Settlement Agreement.

54. An argument could be made that the Multistate Settlement Agreement cannot be parsed into anticompetitive restraints and non-anticompetitive restraints. But the better argument appears to be that restrictions on advertising and the like cannot save a pricing system or output control system that is not actively supervised — even if those regulations are within the same document (like the Multistate Settlement Agreement) or are located within the same statutory code (as in Midcal). That other restrictions on wine distribution and consumption and other supervision of the wine industry are not discussed in Midcal supports this conclusion.

55. Plaintiffs assert that even if we were to find Parker immunity, there is a conspiracy exception, and that the defendants here fall within that exception. There is also a market participant exception to actions which might otherwise be entitled to Parker immunity. The District Court addressed neither argument but on appeal both parties briefed these issues. Although we do not find Parker immunity, we find it useful to clarify these exceptions.

At one point, several courts of appeals had opined that the language in Parker which discusses the market participant exception, created a broad conspiracy exception. See City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Adver., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 374 (1991). The Court in Parker stated, "We have no question of the state or its municipality becoming a participant in the private agreement or combination by others for restraint of trade." 317 U.S. at 351-52 (citing Union Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450 (1941)). The reading of a conspiracy exception also based on language in Parker which said, "The state in adopting and enforcing the prorate program made no contract or agreement and entered into no conspiracy in restraint of trade or to establish monopoly but, as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit." Id. at 352. But just as under Noerr-Pennington immunity, the state does not forfeit Parker immunity simply because it acts with a private party. In Omni, the Supreme Court made it clear that "[t]here is no such conspiracy exception." Id. The Court has clarified that the language in Parker meant "immunity does not necessarily obtain where the State acts not in a regulatory capacity but as a commercial participant in a given market." Id.

As an example of what it means to be a commercial or market participant, the Court in Omni cites Union Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 450 (1941), in which the City of Kansas City was held liable for certain "rebates and concessions made . . . in its capacity as the owner and operator of a wholesale produce market that was integrated with railroad facilities." Id. at 375.

The question of Parker immunity's applicability is a difficult one. As noted, we hold we must apply the Midcal

The government entity therefore was involved in the market as a buyer or seller. Other than Union Pacific, there has been little elaboration about the commercial participant exception to Parker immunity.

The commercial or market participant exception, however, is a concept made familiar by Dormant Commerce Clause jurisprudence. State actions are immune from the Dormant Commerce Clause when they are regulatory actions but not where the state acts as a market participant — just as in Sherman Act antitrust cases. See New Energy Co. v. Limbach, 486 U.S. 269, 277 (1988) ("[The market participant exception] differentiates between a State's acting in its distinctive governmental capacity, and a State's acting in the more general capacity of a market participant; only the former is subject to the limitations of the negative Commerce Clause."). Dormant Commerce Clause cases have found the market participant exception appropriate where the state action "constituted a direct state participation in the market." Camps Newfound/Owatonna, Inc. v. Town of Harrison, 520 U.S. 564, 593 (1997). This includes a state program to pay people who remove abandoned cars from streets and junkyards because the payment was interpreted as an entry into the market for abandoned cars, Hughes v. Alexandria Scrap Corp., 426 U.S. 794, 810 (1976); a program to sell output from a state owned and operated cement plant, Reeves, Inc. v. Stake, 447 U.S. 429, 431-32 (1980); and a program to fund construction projects entirely by a city. White v. Mass. Council of Constr. Employers, Inc., 460 U.S. 204, 208 (1983). None of these cases is analogous to the facts here. In joining the Multistate Settlement Agreement, the States did not enter the tobacco market as a buyer or seller, nor did they assume control or ownership of any entity within the market. If we had found Parker immunity, the States' actions would not fall under the market participant exception to Parker immunity.

test. Although the States satisfy Midcal's "clear articulation" prong, they fail the second prong requiring them to actively supervise the anticompetitive restraints causing injury. Because private participants in state action enjoy Parker immunity only to the extent the States enjoy immunity, the defendants are not shielded by Parker.[56] Therefore, consistent with the Supreme Court's treatment of hybrid restraints, we hold defendants are not immune under the Parker immunity doctrine.

IV.

Constitutional Claims

In its brief, and again at oral argument, plaintiffs asked us to find the Multistate Settlement Agreement unconstitutional under the Commerce Clause or the Compact Clause of the United States Constitution. But plaintiffs did not allege constitutional violations in their amended complaint, nor did the District Court address them. Therefore, these claims will not be addressed on appeal. Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist., 836 F.2d 921, 935 (5th Cir. 1988) ("It is black-letter law that '[a] motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) is to be evaluated only on the pleadings.' ") (quoting O'Quinn v. Manuel, 773 F.2d 605, 608 (5th Cir. 1985)); N.A.M.I. v. Essex County Bd. of Freeholders, 91 F.Supp.2d 781, 787 n.7 (D.N.J. 2000) ("This Court need not consider claims that have not been pleaded in the complaint."); 5A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. § 1356 (1990). " 'Absent exceptional circumstances, an issue not raised in the district court will not be heard on appeal.' " Walton v. Mental Health Ass'n of Southeastern Pa., 168 F.3d 661, 671 (3d Cir. 1999) (quoting Altman v. Altman, 653 F.2d 755, 758 (3d Cir. 1981)). When exceptional circumstances exist or to avoid "manifest injustice," issues not previously raised may be heard to protect the public interest. See id. No such interests are present. Although the Cato Institute, amicus curiae for plaintiffs, argues the constitutional claims, "new issues raised by an amicus are not properly before the court" in the absence of exceptional circumstances. General Eng'g Corp. v. Virgin Islands Water and Power Auth. Caribbean Energy Co., Inc., 805 F.2d 88, 92 (3d Cir. 1986) (citing United Parcel Serv. v. Mitchell, 451 U.S. 56, 60 n.2 (1981)). These constitutional claims are not properly before us.[57]

V.

Conclusion

The Multistate Settlement Agreement creates novel issues because of the uniqueness of the instrument — involving forty-six states and over 98% of an industry. Although plaintiffs have properly pleaded an antitrust injury, the right to petition the government is paramount. Therefore, we hold defendants immune from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. But we find no immunity under the Parker doctrine. We will not address the constitutional issues.

We will affirm the judgment of the District Court.

OPINION and ORDER OF COURT

Pending before the Court is the Joint Motion of Defendants Philip Morris Incorporated ("Philip Morris"), R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company ("R.J. Reynolds") and Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. ("B&W") (collectively "the Defendants") to Dismiss the Complaint filed against them by Plaintiff A.D. Bedell Wholesale Company, Inc. ("Plaintiff") pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). Plaintiff has brought a putative class action against Defendants under

§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18. The primary basis for the motion to dismiss is that "[a]s a matter of law, plaintiff's Complaint fails to state a claim for relief under the anti-trust laws" in that "plaintiff's claims are barred in their entirety by either (or both) of two closely-related antitrust immunity doctrines: the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and the 'state action' doctrine." Defendants' Joint Memorandum of Law in Support of Their Motion to Dismiss the Complaint ("Defendants' Supporting Brief"), p. 3. Additionally, Defendants argue that Plaintiff's Third Claim for Relief ("Count III"), which is brought only against Defendant Philip Morris, must be dismissed for failure to state a claim under § 7 of the Clayton Act upon which relief can be granted. An amici curiae Brief in Support of the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss has been filed by certain state Attorneys General, all members of the Tobacco Committee of the National Association of Attorneys General "to the extent that Plaintiff seeks to impose antitrust liability upon the Defendants for the entering into settlement agreements with the sovereign states, and acts taken in compliance with the terms of such settlement agreements. Brief of Amici Curiae State Attorneys General ("Amici Curiae Brief"), p. 5.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

In deciding a motion to dismiss, all factual allegations and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be accepted as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Colburn v. Upper Darby Tp., 838 F.2d 663, 666 (3d Cir. 1988), cert. den'd, 489 U.S. 1065 (1989). A court may dismiss a plaintiff's complaint only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claims which would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45 (1957). In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court looks to "whether sufficient facts are pleaded to determine that the complaint is not frivolous, and to provide defendants with adequate notice to frame an answer." Colburn, 838 F.2d at 666.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

In November, 1998, the Defendants entered into a settlement agreement (the "Master Settlement Agreement" or "MSA") with forty-six (46) states and six (6) other United States jurisdictions (collectively "the settling states") to settle lawsuits brought or threatened by the settling states for violation of their laws, including consumer protection and/or antitrust laws. MSA, Section 1. Various officials of the settling states (the attorney generals, governors, corporation counsel and mayors) signed the Master Settlement Agreement "on behalf of their respective Settling States." Id. The Master Settlement Agreement was voluntarily entered into by each of the settling states and the Defendants and is the result of arms-length negotiations between the parties to the Agreement. The stated reason for the settling states entering into the MSA was because "the undersigned Settling State officials believe that entry of this Agreement . . . with the tobacco industry is necessary in order to promote the Settling States' policies designed to reduce Youth smoking, to promote the public health and to secure monetary payments to the Settling States." MSA, Section 1.

Relevant for purposes of this action, the Master Settlement Agreement contains a clause, termed by Plaintiff in its Complaint as the Renegade Clause. The Renegade Clause states: "[a] Subsequent Participating Manufacturer ("SPM") shall have payment obligations under this Agreement only in the event that its Market Share in any calendar year exceeds the greater of (1) its 1998 market share or (2) 125% of its 1997 market share." The Master Settlement Agreement also provides for the creation of a $50 million fund by the Attorneys General of the United States, acting through the National Association of Attorneys General ("NAAG"), which is to be maintained by the Attorneys General to supplement the settling states' enforcement and implementation of the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement and consent decrees and investigation and litigation of potential violation of laws with respect to tobacco products.

SUMMARY OF PLAINTIFF'S CLAIMS AGAINST THE DEFENDANTS

Count I of Plaintiff's Complaint alleges a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. More specifically, Count I of the Plaintiff's Complaint alleges that the Renegade Clause of the Master Settlement Agreement and the $50 million enforcement fund were made part of the Master Settlement Agreement by the Defendants as part of a conspiracy to prevent competition at a discount level by existing SPMs and nonparticipating manufacturers ("NPMs") and potential new entrants to the cigarette sales market and to raise and maintain the price of cigarettes in the U.S. cigarette market at artificially high levels. Thus, Plaintiff argues, the Master Settlement Agreement on its face sets forth a classic horizontal conspiracy to restrict output, allocate market shares and raise prices between three competitors having nearly 90% of the market. In Count I, Plaintiff also alleges that the acts committed by the Defendants in furtherance of their unlawful conspiracy included the payment by Philip Morris to Liggett, a tobacco manufacturer and then a NPM in the MSA, of $300 million for the sale of three relatively insignificant brands of cigarettes which was conditioned upon Liggett signing the Master Settlement Agreement and the pressuring by the Defendants, through their own attorneys and indirectly through the NAAG and its private attorneys, of the few remaining small competitors to join the Master Settlement Agreement.

Count II of Plaintiff's Complaint alleges a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. More particularly, in Count II of the Complaint, Plaintiff alleges that the above-described alleged acts and agreements by the Defendants constitute a conspiracy in furtherance of Philip Morris' monopolization of the U.S. cigarette market in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act in that the agreements and the acts taken in furtherance of the agreements were specifically intended to exclude and have in fact excluded meaningful price competition in the United States domestic cigarette market. Plaintiff further alleges in Count II that the acts of Philip Morris constitute monopolization and attempted monopolization of the U.S. cigarette market; that Philip Morris has and has had the specific intent to monopolize the U.S. cigarette market; and that there is a reasonable probability that it has or soon will have attained monopoly power in the U.S. cigarette market.

Count III of Plaintiff's Complaint alleges a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act against Defendant Philip Morris only.

More specifically, Plaintiff alleges that Philip Morris paid Liggett to join the Master Settlement Agreement to remove Liggett as a competitive threat. Specifically, Plaintiff alleges that on November 20, 1998, three (3) days after the Master Settlement Agreement was signed, Philip Morris purchased three brands of premium cigarettes from Liggett which constituted about two-thirds of the 2% of the overall domestic cigarette market that were sold by NPMs (or 0.2% of the domestic cigarette market) in exchange for Liggett's agreement to become a SPM in the MSA. Plaintiff further alleges that this acquisition would constitute a purchase of assets illegal under § 7 of the Clayton Act in that its effect may be, and has been, to substantially lessen competition and to further or create a monopoly in the sale of domestic cigarettes. Plaintiff argues that until that time Liggett was a NPM and although NPMs comprised only approximately 2% of the overall domestic cigarette market, they represented a clear and present danger of price competition. Liggett sales made up about two-thirds of that 2% and therefore, Plaintiff argues, having Liggett join the Master Settlement Agreement was a necessary step to eliminating virtually all price competition with the domestic tobacco market.

LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. Counts I and II: Sherman Act claims.

1. Application of Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine.

Defendants first argue that the claims asserted against them in Plaintiff's Complaint must be dismissed in their entirety in light of the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine because "the Noerr-Pennington doctrine also confers antitrust immunity upon litigation activities of competitors," "[l]itigation settlements with the government are indisputably within the scope of Noerr-Pennington immunity," "it is well-established that the Noerr-Pennington . . . doctrine [is] applicable even if the alleged conduct would otherwise be deemed 'illegal per se' under the antitrust laws," and "the M.S.A. was an agreement with the government (rather than a mere agreement with other private parties), [and therefore,] it would also be entitled to Noerr-Pennington protection as a government contract, even if it had not been executed to resolve pending and threatened litigation." Defendants' Supporting Brief, pp. 5-6, 8-10.

As explained by the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in Cheminor Drugs, Ltd. v. Ethyl Corp., 168 F.3d 119, 122 (3d Cir.), cert. den' d, 120 S.Ct. 173 (1999):

> [a] party who petitions the government for redress generally is immune from antitrust liability. This immunity extends to persons who petition all types of government entities — legislatures, administrative agencies, and courts. "[W]here restraint upon trade or monopolization is the result of valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the [Sherman] Act can be made out."
> Noerr-Pennington does not apply, however to petitions or lawsuits that are a "mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an > attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Often, a petition to the government causes an anticompetitive effect, but "evidence of anticompetitive intent or purpose alone cannot transfer otherwise legitimate activity into a sham."

Id. at 122 (internal citations omitted). See also City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365 (1991) ("[t]he 'sham' exception to Noerr encompasses situations in which persons use the governmental process — as opposed to the outcome of that process — as an anticompetitive weapon . . . . A 'sham' situation involves a defendant whose activities are 'not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable governmental action' at all [citation omitted] not one 'who genuinely seeks to achieve his governmental result, but does so through improper means'."); We, Inc. v. City of Philadelphia, 174 F.3d 322, 326 (3d Cir. 1999) ("[t]he Noerr-Pennington doctrine originated in the anti-trust context as the proposition that 'joint efforts to influence public officials do not violate the antitrust laws even though intended to eliminate competition. Such conduct is not illegal, either standing alone or as part of a broader scheme itself violative of the Sherman Act'.").

Relevant to the case sub judice is the decision of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma in Hise v. Philip Morris Inc., 46 F.Supp.2d 1201 (N.D. Ok. 1999), aff'd, 2000 WL 192892 (10th Cir. Feb. 18, 2000). Hise involved the very same defendants as in the case at bar and involved claims by the plaintiffs, consumers of the defendants' tobacco products, that the defendants had violated federal antitrust laws by negotiating and entering into the MSA. Defendants argue that said activity was protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as conduct incidental to litigation and as a contract entered into with the government:

> Defendants assert that subsequent to being sued by over 40 states in the respective state courts, they entered into the M.S.A. to compromise these lawsuits. Defendants contend that the M.S.A. represents defendants' petitioning of the settling states and the judiciary. Defendants further argue that the M.S.A. is protected as a contract with government officials. Defendants point to plaintiffs' concession that the M.S.A. was a compromise agreement reached between defendants and the several states that had initiated lawsuits against defendants. Defendants therefore maintain that both the negotiation phase and the resulting agreement with the states fall within the protections afforded by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

Id. at 1205-06. Ultimately, the Hise district court concluded that the defendants' activities "in negotiating the M.S.A. with the settling states and achieving a settlement agreement with those states are protected under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine as conduct incidental to litigation." Id. at 1206. See also id. at 1207 ("[t]he Court finds that the actions of defendants in negotiating and executing the M.S.A. fall within the recognition that 'Noerr shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose' . . . and therefore concludes that the concerted effort by defendants to influence public officials, i.e., the states' Attorney General, to accept a settlement in exchange for dismissing the numerous lawsuits pending against defendants is among the activities protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine."). In so holding, the court reasoned "[t]he Court agrees with defendants that the doctrine would surely ring hollow if it failed to encompass private entities who, after having been sued by one or more states for similar conduct, jointly petition the states in order to achieve a mutually acceptable settlement, designed to reduce the amount of time and expense involved in defending the action." Id. Moreover, the Hise court explained that under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, "the fact that the private defendants' motives are selfish is irrelevant" as is "the fact that the result may have anti-competitive consequences." Id., citing, City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380 (1991); Greenwood Utilities Com'n v. Mississippi Power Co., 751 F.2d 1484, 1497 (5th Cir. 1985). Significantly, the district court's decision in Hise was recently affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals in Hise and Isch v. Philip Morris Inc. et al., 2000 WL 192892 (10th Cir. Feb. 18, 2000). In the appellate decision, the court first explained: "the district court rejected [the plaintiffs'] first claim that the settlement agreement violates the Sherman Anti-Trust Act" and "[i]n so holding, the district court determined the tobacco companies' action in negotiating and executing the settlement agreement fell under the protections of the 'Noerr-Pennington' doctrine which shields from the Sherman Anti-Trust Act any concerted effort to influence public officials, regardless or intent or purpose." Id. The appellate court then stated that "we must agree with the district court that summary judgment should be granted in favor of the tobacco companies," that "[b]ecause the district court issued a well-reasoned decision, thoroughly explaining the reasons for granting summary judgment . . . we decline to duplicate its analysis here," and ultimately concluded "[f]or the reasons contained herein, and for substantially the same reasons articulated in the district court's April 29, 1999 decision, we AFFIRM summary judgment in favor of the Appellee tobacco companies".[1] Id.

After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties, as did the Hise courts, I conclude that to the extent Plaintiff's antitrust claims are based upon the Defendants' actions in negotiating and executing the MSA, said actions fall within the category of conduct protected by the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine and are not subject to the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington immunity doctrine. Accordingly, to the extent Plaintiff's antitrust claims found in Counts I and II of the Complaint are based upon the Defendants' actions in negotiating and executing

1. Notably, the appellate court also explained that the plaintiff in the case sub judice, A.D. Bedell Wholesale Company Inc., had filed an amicus curiae brief with the appellate court claiming that the district court had "sweepingly applied the 'Noerr-Pennington doctrine' without the necessary 'closer examination of the terms of the [settlement agreement] itself and the circumstances pursuant' thereto" and that both the tobacco defendants and A.D. Bedell had subsequently filed motions with accompanying briefs with respect to the amicus brief, that the court was denying both motions because supplemental responses were not necessary, but that "in doing so, we note we have reviewed the responsive briefs, and conclude that even if considered, they would not affect our disposition in this case." Id. at n.3.

the MSA, these claims are dismissed for failure to state a Sherman Act claim upon which relief can be granted.

2. Application of Parker State Action immunity doctrine.

Defendants contend that all of the antitrust claims against them must be dismissed because they are immune with respect to these actions under the state action immunity doctrine. In articulating the state action immunity doctrine, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit explained: "[i]n Parker v. Brown the Supreme Court held that the Sherman Act does not prohibit an anticompetitive restraint imposed by a state as an act of government." Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc. v. American Bar Assoc., 107 F.3d 1026, 1035 (3d Cir. 1997), cert. den'd, 522 U.S. 907 (1997).

To the extent the Plaintiff's Complaint is premised upon it being injured by the Defendants' conduct of entering into, executing and implementing the Master Settlement Agreement and in engaging in conduct mandated under the terms of the Master Settlement, I conclude that the first step in determining whether the state action immunity doctrine is applicable to said conduct must be to determine whether the same conduct by the settling states, i.e. in entering into, executing, and implementing the MSA, would be subject to state action immunity. Under the facts of this case, this conduct was action taken both by the Defendants and by the settling states and was mandated by the terms of the MSA.

After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties and the amici curiae, I conclude that because the conduct of entering into, executing and implementing the MSA was undertaken by the settling states functioning in their sovereign capacities, to the extent Plaintiff's injuries are premised upon said conduct, liability for said conduct by the states would be subject to Parker state action immunity. Obviously in so holding, I opine, contrary to the argument presented by Plaintiff, that in this case, application of the California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S.Ct. 937 (1980) test is inappropriate. See Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc., 107 F.3d at 1035 ("[b]ecause the states are sovereign in imposing the bar admission requirements, the clear articulation and active supervision requirements urged by [plaintiff] are inapplicable.").

Having so determined, I further conclude that to the extent Plaintiff alleges that its injuries were caused by the Defendants entering into, implementing and executing the Master Settlement Agreement with the settling states and in engaging in conduct mandated under the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement, said conduct similarly is protected under the state action immunity doctrine. To allow otherwise "would allow the Parker doctrine to be circumvented by artful pleading: 'A plaintiff could frustrate any [Parker protected state plan] merely by filing suit against the regulated private parties, rather than the state officials who implement the plan'." Charley's Taxi Radio Dispatch Corp. v. SIDA of Hawaii, Inc., 810 F.2d 869, 878 (9th Cir. 1987), quoting, Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. U.S., 471 U.S. 48, 105 S.Ct. 1721, 1727 (1985). See also Automated Salvage Transport, Inc. v. Wheelabrator Environmental Systems, Inc., 155 F.2d 59, 74 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that once it was determined that state immunity protected state solid waste authority from liability under Sherman Act with respect to settlement agreement it entered into with private party defendants, private defendants were also protected under state action doctrine: "our conclusion that [the state entity] can avail itself of the Parker doctrine also compels the conclusion that the [private party] defendants are shielded from antitrust liability. Subjecting them to antitrust liability would effectively block [the state entity's] efforts to carry out its mandate through contracts with private parties"); Armstrong Surgical Center, Inc. v. Armstrong County Memorial Hospital, 185 F.3d 154, 159 (3d Cir. 1999) (noting, in discussing the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, "if relief is sought solely for injury as to which the state would enjoy immunity under Parker, the private petitioner also enjoys immunity."). Thus, to the extent Plaintiff's Sherman Act anti-trust claims against Defendants, found in Counts I and II of the Complaint, are premised upon the Defendants entering into, implementing and executing the Master Settlement Agreement with the settling states and engaging in conduct mandated under the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement, these claims must be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

3. Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims with respect to Philip Morris' conduct towards Liggett and Defendants' conduct towards other manufacturers of domestic cigarettes.

It must be emphasized that the analyses and holdings of this Court thus far have been limited to the injuries allegedly sustained by Plaintiff as a result of the Defendants' conduct in negotiating, entering into, implementing and executing the Master Settlement Agreement with the settling states and in engaging in conduct mandated under the terms of the Master Settlement Agreement. My analyses and holdings have not addressed the Plaintiff's allegations of violation of the Sherman Act with respect to Philip Morris buying three brands of cigarettes from Liggett in order to coerce its signing the Master Settlement Agreement or the conduct of the Defendants in coercing smaller manufacturers of domestic cigarettes to sign the MSA.

Defendants do, however, attack the viability of these allegations while discussing the applicability of the state action immunity doctrine to the allegations of the case at bar. See Defendants' Supporting Brief, p. 16.

After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties on this issue, I find that the state action immunity doctrine is applicable to the Plaintiff's claims that Defendants violated the Sherman Act in this regard. Specifically, I find that because the injury allegedly suffered by Plaintiffs as a result of the Defendants' alleged acts of coercion is an incidental effect of the conduct of the Defendants and the settling states in entering into, executing and implementing the MSA, conduct which I have held to be immune under the state action immunity doctrine, the state action immunity doctrine also applies to bar Plaintiff's anti-trust claims based upon said coercive acts. See Massachusetts School of Law at Andover, Inc., 107 F.3d at 1035.

Appendix B

4. Summary.

For the above-stated reasons, Counts I and II of Plaintiff's Complaint are dismissed in their entirety.

B. Count III — Plaintiff's § 7 Clayton Act claim against Defendant Philip Morris.

In Count III of the Complaint, brought only against Defendant Philip Morris, Plaintiff alleges a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. The allegations underlying this claim have been set forth supra., and need not be repeated. Defendant Philip Morris moves to dismiss this claim against it on several bases. First, Philip Morris argues that this claim is only another antitrust challenge to the legality of the MSA, that Plaintiff alleges that because the MSA is unlawful, it was also unlawful for Phillip Morris to acquire the Liggett brands in order to induce Liggett to join the MSA which is necessarily premised upon the alleged illegality of the MSA. Therefore, Philip Morris contends that the claim should be dismissed on the same immunity grounds as the rest of the Complaint. Second, Philip Morris contends that Plaintiff's alleged injury from the acquisition by Philip Morris of the Liggett brands does not constitute an anti-trust injury because "[a] plaintiff suffers 'antitrust injury' from an acquisition only if its injury is caused by the increase in market power that the acquired assets confer upon the acquiring firm." Defendants' Supporting Brief, p. 23. In the case at bar, Philip Morris argues that "[b]ecause plaintiff concedes that the brands acquired by Philip Morris are 'insignificant,' the acquisition of these brands, as a matter of law, could not increase Philip Morris' market power and thus could not cause 'antitrust injury' to plaintiff." Id. Third, Philip Morris argues that while Plaintiff alleges that it was injured by Liggett's decision to join the MSA, under Alberta Gas Chemicals Ltd. v. E.I. Du Pont De Nemours and Co., 826 F.2d 1235, 1241 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. den'd, 486 U.S. 1059 (1988), such an allegation does not constitute "antitrust injury" resulting from an asset acquisition. Fourth, Philip Morris argues that to the extent Plaintiff is alleging that this acquisition is unlawful without regard to the MSA, § 7 of the Clayton Act only prohibits acquisitions that are likely "substantially to lessen competition," "[a]n acquisition cannot cause substantial injury to competition if it does not result in a 'significant' increase in the acquiring firm's market share." Id. Here Plaintiff alleges that the three brands purchased by Philip Morris are "insignificant" and together account for only 0.2% of cigarette sales in the United States, a de minimis amount. "Because plaintiff's own allegations confirm that Philip Morris' acquisition of the three brands acquired from Liggett cannot have a significant competitive impact, the Complaint fails to state a claim for relief under Clayton Act § 7." Id. at 24. Finally, in Defendants' Joint Reply Brief in Further Support of Their Motion to Dismiss the Complaint ("Defendants' Reply Brief"), Philip Morris argues that an acquisition is unlawful only if it will substantially harm competition, that the only allegation in Plaintiff's Complaint as to how the acquisition of the Liggett brands impairs competition is the allegation that the acquisition induced Liggett to join the MSA, and that because this allegation obviously depends upon a finding that the MSA itself is unlawful, the Clayton Act claim must be dismissed if the MSA is entitled to antitrust immunity. Defendants' Reply Brief, p. 10.

In response, Plaintiff argues that Philip Morris misstates its Clayton Act claim when it contends that said claim is "simply another antitrust challenge to the legality of the MSA" or that its injury arises from Liggett's decision to join the MSA. Plaintiff's Opposition Brief, p. 21, citing Defendants' Supporting Brief, p. 22. "While Liggett's execution of the MSA contributed to further concentration in the market, it was Philip Morris' acquisition — not Liggett's decision to join the MSA — is what violates § 7; and plaintiff, as a direct purchaser in the market where such acquisition may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in Philip Morris, unequivocally has standing to sue for injunctive relief." Id. Plaintiff also argues that "[a]n antitrust plaintiff seeking injunctive relief for violation of § 7 need only show a threatened injury, not an actual one." Id. Plaintiff further argues that its injury flows from the fact that it is a purchaser and reseller of cigarettes and Philip Morris now controls the supply of cigarettes. Therefore, Plaintiff argues, it is thus forced to operate in a market controlled by a monopolist rather than market forces. Id. Third, Plaintiff argues that Philip Morris' de minimis argument is not applicable here because in the case at bar there exists a highly concentrated market with significant barriers to entry and therefore, "even the slightest gain in market share via an acquisition violates § 7." Id. at 22.

After careful consideration of the submissions of the parties, I find as follows. First, given that Plaintiff's Clayton Act claim against Philip Morris is not premised upon Liggett's involvement in the Master Settlement Agreement, but rather, is based upon Philip Morris' acquisition of the Liggett brands allegedly to substantially lessen competition and to further or create a monopoly in the sale of domestic cigarettes, neither the Noerr-Pennington nor the Parker state action immunity doctrines are applicable. Further, I find that because Plaintiff's Clayton Act claim against Philip Morris is based upon Philip Morris' acquisition of the Liggett brands allegedly to substantially lessen competition and to further or create a monopoly in the sale of domestic cigarettes, it is not necessary to substantively address those arguments raised by Philip Morris that are premised upon Plaintiff's Clayton Act claim being based upon Liggett's involvement in the Master Settlement Agreement.

Finally, I find that because a claim for relief should only be dismissed at the motion to dismiss stage if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of its claims which would entitle it to relief, it would be improper to dismiss Count III of Plaintiff's Complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. This is so because Plaintiff has alleged that Philip Morris' acquisition may be and has been to substantially lessen competition in the domestic cigarette market, and to further or create a monopoly in the sale of domestic cigarettes. Complaint, ¶ 104. Additionally, Plaintiff has alleged that Defendants collectively account for 89% of all cigarettes sold in the domestic cigarette market, Philip Morris has a 52% total market share in the market and sells more than 60% of premium brand cigarettes, and barriers to entry in the U.S. market for cigarettes are substantial. Id. at ¶¶ 3 and 24. See U.S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271, 278 (1964) (holding that acquisition by Alcoa of stock and assets of another company violated § 7 of the Clayton Act where Alcoa had controlled from 27.8% to 32.5% of the aluminum conductor market, acquisition added 1.3% to Alcoa's control of the market and market was highly concentrated); F.T.C. v. PepsiCo, Inc., 477 F.2d 24, 27 (2d Cir. 1973) (holding in context of action for preliminary injunction that acquisition by PepsiCo of stock of another company likely violated § 7 of Clayton Act and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act where, inter alia, PepsiCo occupied 16.3% of soft drink concentrates market, PepsiCo and Coca Cola combined to control 58.3% of market, the top four companies accounted for 70.6% of market and soft drink business was not easily entered and acquisition would give PepsiCo another 1% of the soft drink non-cola market and .3% of the soft drink market); Stanley Works v. F.T.C., 469 F.2d 498, 507-08 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. den'd, 412 U.S. 928 (1973) (holding that company with 1% of market's acquisition of another company with 22%-24% market share was a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act and not de minimis where four companies dominated 50% of the market). Accordingly, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's claim against Philip Morris for violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act is denied.
